CHAMPAGNE

While Louis XIV disliked champagne, Louis XV shared it with his mistresses, and Louis XVI preferred still wine. Napoleon drank it only for celebrations, favouring Burgundy, while Louis XVIII liked sweet wines and Charles X preferred eaux de vie. Louis-Philippe I supported champagne's growth without drinking it, and Napoleon III had limited interest but it was during his reign that the first champagne ads appeared and artists began shaping the image of champagne.

This marked the start of rare, artist-designed bottles. The old-style silhouette, based on a vintage bottle found in a vault, is now used for the most prestigious cuvées, including Dom Pérignon, La Grande Dame, Dom Ruinart, and Comtes de Champagne. Each house developed its own signature cuvée, often in collaboration with artists to dress the bottle.

BILLECART-SALMON

The majority of the grapes used for vinification come from a radius of 20km around Epernay, where the Grand Crus of Pinot Noir, Meunier and Chardonnay co-exist, in the ethereal vineyards of the Montagne de Reims, the Vallée de la Marne and the Côte des Blancs.

The Tsar's wine - Louis Roederer's most famous wine was created in 1876 to satisfy the demanding tastes of Tsar Alexander II. The emperor asked Louis Roederer to reserve the House's best cuvée for him every year. He was particularly fond of the House's wine. To distinguish this cuvée, this exceptional champagne came in a flat-bottomed, transparent lead-crystal bottle. Pascal COTAT

PASCAL COTAT

Located in the western portion of the Sancerre appellation, Chavignol has a unique type of soil called, in French, "terres blanches." The region is essentially a chalk plateau (the same vein as is found in Chablis) with clay and limestone soils. The top vineyards, 'Monts Damnés,' 'Grande Côte,' and 'Les Culs de Beaujeu,' are perched on steep hillsides with little topsoil.

Cotat as a rule harvests by hand and very late, as pushing ripeness to the extreme is one element that gives these wines their weighty texture and complexity. While the Pascal Cotat estate is not organically certified, they farm more or less according to organic principles, i.e. they do not treat their vines with pesticides; only indigenous yeasts are used for fermentation; and they follow the lunar cycle for racking.

MAX FERDINAND RICHTER

The Elisenberg vineyard was planted by Richter ancestor Franz Ludwig Niessen following the Napoleonic Wars in 1815 and was named after the late but still-popular Queen Louisa of Prussia. The vineyard faces south and enjoys a cooler microclimate than vineyards located closer to the Mosel River. The greyslate terroir has rich layers of quartz that create a special style of wine. The Elisenberg Rieslings feature a very long growing season and are dominated by flavors of wild berries: red and black currant, blackberry and raspberry. A complex acid structure adds to the long-lived, refined and delicate character of these wines.

In the late 1960s, while attending the University of California at Davis, Christian Moueix fell in love with the Napa Valley and its wines. His love of Napa Valley lingered and, in 1981, he discovered the historic Napanook vineyard, a 134-acre site west of Yountville that had been the source of fruit for some of the finest napa valley wines of the 1940s and 1950s. In 1982, Moueix entered into a partnership to develop the vineyard and, in 1995, became its sole owner. CHÂTEAU ST-JEAN

Our iconic Château dates to the 1920's, but our story really starts in 1973 when our three founders bought the property with a vision for creating wines that captured the nuance, character, and quality of Sonoma's distinct vineyards and growing regions. They named the winery after the only woman who was "saintly" enough to keep the three of them in line, Jean Sheffield, who happened to be their wife, sister, and sister-in-law. Since then, some of the most iconic names in winemaking have practiced the same values that built Château St. Jean: a belief in this place, a hospitality that comes from the heart, and an allergy to pretense.

Initially the idea was to bring Roberto over and then find land, and plant it. But then they found an old vineyard, Altamira, planted in 1950 and the plans changed. The Rousseau family's approach is to express grape, cluster, vine, parcel, and vineyard in the best possible way. This is practiced by keeping all work in the vineyards and cellar as close to the original as possible. Vineyards are plowed, and spraying is minimal. Rousseau is not organically certified but pays attention to what is done to maintain an active life in the vineyards with both insects and small animals. The vines are planted in the traditional way with about 11,000 plants per hectare. On average, the vines are 45 years old, and in the cellar, the wine is fermented in steel tanks with the natural yeast. All wines are then aged in a combination of new and used barrels for an extended period.

FRÉDÉRIC ESMONINFREDERIC ESMONIN

Farming is only part of what they do well. Esmonin also employs winemaking techniques that are gentle to the grapes and produce the finest possible quality level. Using a new bladder-press, Esmonin has excellent control over the amount of pressure exerted on the grapes, which are picked only when they have reached ideal ripeness. After a short cold maceration gives the wines an extra dimension of fruit, they are aged in carefully selected French oak barrels of Allier and Nevers forest wood made by Radoux and Berthomieu, two of the very best coopers. Wines are aged in barrels of varying age and toast and then blended in order to achieve optimum balance and complexity. The domaine ages its wines in wooden casks for between 14 to 17 months. Critics, too, recognize that Domaine Frédéric Esmonin is below the radar for the highest echelon of Burgundy collectors, hence the pricing is still affordable.

The Margaux appellation was the first Bordeaux area cultivated for vineyards. There is evidence that the Romans planted grapes in the area almost 2,000 years ago. GAJA

Angelo was a pioneer, among the first to bottle single vineyard Barbaresco, showcasing a dedication to terroir. His bold move to plant international grapes like Chardonnay and Cabernet Sauvignon in Barbaresco drew skepticism, prompting his father to shift from traditional varieties, coining the term “darmagi.” Ironically, this expression of regret became the name of one of Gaja’s most successful wines, introduced in 1982.

The secret of the high quality of Damilano wines is hidden in the grapes and in the MGA that the company care with the same passion, dedication and precision of the founders, combined with contemporary wisdom. These are prestigious MGA, located in areas that are most suitable for the production of Nebbiolo grapes. Think of wines like Cannubi, Liste, Brunate, Cerequio and Raviole.

LUIGI SCAVINO

The Azienda Agricola Azelia is located within the commune of Castiglione Falletto, a small town in the Langhe region, in the heart of the area where Barolo is made. It was established in 1920 by Cavalier Lorenzo Scavino, great-grandfather of the present owner Luigi Scavino, and at the beginning it was a small farm. Luigi Scavino's grandfather, Alfonso, decided to vinify the grapes from the estate vineyards and started bottling the wine.

ANDRE SOTTIMANO

The approach here is one of minimal intervention: indigenous yeasts, no fining or filtering. No insecticides are used and only organic fertilizers are used, and only minimally. Natural cover crops (grass cover) are left in the rows between the vines and are mowed 2 or 3 times a year. In autumn the soil of every other row between the vines is tilled. Each of their four cru Barbarescos are given the same treatment to allow the uniqueness of each cru to express itself. Fermentation is done in oak, of which about 30% is new, followed by 18-20 months in neutral barriques.

DOMENICO CLERICO

In addition to his devotion to single cru vineyards, Clerico championed what is considered a modern style of Barolo, using new burgundy barrels and later barriques to age the wines. He always had an eye toward the future, often experimenting with new technology and longer macerations. Despite his reputation as a modernist, the primary goal was always to maintain purity of fruit and expression of the land, which the Domenico Clerico wines achieve beautifully.

The great attention in the vineyard management results in a natural selection of the grapes. In fact, the plants are able to give equal resources to both production and vegetation, thus producing the perfect amount of grapes, that uniformly reaches full ripening. Spread over gentle slopes, almost imperceptible to the naked eye, the vineyards are nestled between the land and the sea in the region known as Alta Maremma, specifically within the territory of the Metalliferous Hills. This area is distinctively characterized by its soil, which is rich in stones, rocks, clay, silt, sand, and especially micro-minerals. This unique genetic heritage is reflected in Tua Rita's wines, which are aromatically marked by pleasant iron notes and, on the palate, by a beautiful saline character.

GIUSEPPE QUINTARELLI

Primofiore Quintarelli wine is a wine that combines the tradition of the reds of Valpolicella with that of Bordeaux. At the end of the harvest, the grapes are left to dry for about a month before proceeding to fermentation. Before bottling, the wine ages for a year in large Slavonian oak barrels. In the glass it has a dark ruby red color with slight garnet reflections. The nose opens on floral notes reminiscent of violet, aromas of cherry, ripe red fruit and nuances of soft spices. On the palate it has good structure, evolved tannins well integrated with the body of the wine, rich and complex aromas. The finish is harmonious and very persistent, with a finish that returns to savory and slightly spicy sensations. A great red, signed by one of the best “authors” of Italian wine
